Manager of the GAZETTE.

Senator Bowen seems to have made a very bright speech on Tuesday in advocacy of the Blair educational bill. Since he made his speech on the silver question in March, 1886, he is always sure of attention in the senate.

According to our dispatches the bill granting Lake Moraine to the city for a water supply has passed the senate. This action was very prompt and the thanks of this city are due to the senators. It is to be hoped that Representative Symes will imitate this promptness in getting the bill through the house.

The New York World says that the sympathy of the country is fast moving toward the side of the Reading miners. That is the way it ought to move. The Reading Railway company is a powerful corporation which deserves no sympathy. The miners are demanding only an advance in wages which the railroad company could well afford to pay and add to the selling price of the coal. We hope the miners will succeed.—Denver Republican

We trust our esteemed contemporary is expressing a deserved, intelligent opinion in the above, but it does not look that way. It gives three reasons why the strike should succeed.

First, because the Reading Railroad company is a powerful corporation which deserves no sympathy.

Second, because the advance in wages demanded, the company could well afford to pay, and

Thirdly, that the company should add this advance in wages to the selling price of coal.

It will readily strike the thoughtful reader, that any of these reasons are [illegible]. It is not plain that the demand for an advance is a reasonable demand, which is the only reason for granting it. And to the first reason given, it is quite true that the Reading affords a large [illegible] and does not receive much sympathy, but this is no good reason for robbing it. The fact remains that this corporation has been in financial difficulty of the time since 1873. It has only been out of the hands of a receiver for a few days, and has paid its owners but very little return. The second is not a very good one. We presume that a great many companies that are doing a very profitable business could afford to increase the wages, but the proper inquiry is whether the advance demanded is a righteous one. If it is, it should be paid whether the railroad can afford to or not. The third reason is, perhaps the absurd of all. It involves the question of whether the poor people who buy this coal can afford to pay the price of the advance of this coal as well as the coal miners can afford to do without the advance in their wages. Dropping the "Molly Maguire" trouble, it was rather a notorious fact that the miners were taking four days a week to support their families, and remained drunk the other three. They were not pleased even with this, and struck for another day's drunk. The labor element of Denver seems to be a very intelligent element and suitable for a great many papers, but we hope that they would be just as willing to subscribe for a paper that insists on laboring men not being robbed by high prices as well as by unreasonably low wages.

[Special Correspondence.]

LONDON, Dec. 22.—What about something that has not been written about before I venture to inflict my readers with my experiences will be the question which perhaps is put more frequently to me than any other. Yet all [illegible] careful not to make an effort to meet the [illegible] of rent [illegible] and after [illegible] of [illegible] through all the [illegible] under the sun.

The modern editor [illegible] with Napoleon the Great, believes that there is no such word as impossible, and I feel there is always an undiscovered [illegible] for the patient seeker, and in the [illegible] for no two pairs of eyes [illegible] same sight at once, there is no end to mental magic, and history, [illegible] as susceptible of variation [illegible] as it has been since time began and will to the end of ends.

My business, however, [illegible] with history or its variations, save indirectly, and I am a degree as [illegible] are found in every foot of this old world, in which the same human actions are almost [illegible], things remain constant with the race. Yet the American who visits for the first time an English [illegible] has a curious sense that he is treading the [illegible] all that background from which he has emerged, an accident, but not the real having, nor to be quite real till full knowledge of this [illegible] has been a part of [illegible]. It is certain, too, that the American sees the treasures of the past, very far beyond the London of today, which, under the [illegible] of exceptional staff, regards the interests in anything as very bad form, and scorns with supercilious inquiry at the eager tourist. And as tourists are of many orders, such a position at least elect to accept with the crumbs and regard London simply as a spot in which living during the winter may be possible, but not one in which the [illegible] of that my errand and errandless [illegible] time, it follows that for many the real London remains unknown, its treasures of art and [illegible], and all that [illegible] our common [illegible] a sealed book.

This does not [illegible] may be left quite out of the question, their [illegible] being simply to be filled by the word American and to give an [illegible] ground to the conviction held by a large proportion of English people, that Americans and such are inevitably synonyms. The total expenditure of money, the assurance, the push, the utter [illegible] of [illegible] has graven the [illegible] in lines too deep for any [illegible] efface, and it is only the knowledge that [illegible] this surface, the [illegible] and [illegible] are [illegible] and more and that unless of [illegible] and feeling on vital points is [illegible] and [illegible] that [illegible] will [illegible] ment at some of the [illegible].

It is not [illegible], the chance tourist who is [illegible] to know London, or any of its [illegible] or oth [illegible] its [illegible] anything but a bird view to its [illegible] of a day or a week, and it is only [illegible] settled [illegible] daily life and [illegible] by realizing how much has been [illegible] by [illegible] assumption, [illegible] and one begins [illegible] to work for the old [illegible] are not necessarily what have found [illegible] in glass books or [illegible] [illegible] by [illegible] [illegible] are [illegible] on a more [illegible] by frequent mere [illegible] [illegible] last [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Yesterday morning about one o'clock the north glass window front of the store of William Scott & Co. was broken by a large stone. A man who sleeps in the rear of the store was awakened by the crash, and hearing the sound of retreating footsteps fired twice in the direction from which he thought the sound proceeded, but without hitting the would be intruder. Mr. Scott thinks that the window was broken with burglarious intent, as there were several guns and revolvers within reach.

—Colonel Davis was quite ill again yesterday on account of the removal of the body of the young girl who committed suicide before he arrived upon the scene. Beverly's miniature stock company is packed houses at the Tabor Grand, Denver. They will appear in our opera house next Monday evening. The Denver Republican in speaking of their performance says: "The performance which Hadley's minstrels gave at the Tabor Opera house last night to an audience which completely filled the house was admirable in every respect. The singing is the best any minstrel company has ever given us, particularly that of the quartette. The work of Burton the equilibrist, was marvelous, and was not it is worthy of note, in the slightest degree repulsive. Quite the feature of the programme was the acrobatic act of the Herbert Morello troupe. The excellence of gymnastic work is not merely in the performance of a difficult feat, but in the style and grace with which it is done. There is something truly beautiful in the tumbling of these acrobats. The costumes worn by the company are rich and attractive, the music good and the performance goes with a rush."

Yesterday afternoon about half past two o'clock Dr. T. G. Horn the surgeon of the Denver Texas & Fort Worth railroad in this city took the train for Franceville to attend to the injuries of a man who had been run over by the cars at that place. Dr. Horn went out to Franceville on the afternoon train, and found the man to be very seriously injured. His name was William Finnamore he had been employed as a brakeman on a freight train. He was hurt while in the act of coupling two cars together. He was standing on the track ready to make the coupling, when his feet slipped and he fell under the cars. His left leg was completely severed from the body a short distance above the knee and his right foot was badly crushed. In addition to this he received serious internal injuries. He only lived an hour after the doctor arrived. The deceased was a married man and has a family who are at present living at Granite. Dr. Horn returned to the city on a special engine at half-past seven o'clock last evening.
